COLUMBIAN LAW SCHOOL.

A brilliant and fashionable audience assem-bled last evening in the National theater to witness the commencement exercises of the law department of the Columbian university. The interior of the edifice was never more handsomely decorated, the balustrades being elaborately festooned with the flags of many nations, and the stage being gorgeously arrayed with every product of the hot house rayed with every product of the not house and the botanic garden. A high bank of red and white roses, intermingled with tulips and japonicas, surmounted by a brazen eagle and the national colors, made up a beautiful back-ground, while on each side profuse displays of bloom and bud conjoined to produce an ef-fect that was both dazzling and artistic. Rows of fautastic floral figures, such as cornu-Rows of fautastic floral figures, such as cornuccipias, scales of justice, harps, books, chairs and tables, and fragrant bunches of immortelles and jessamine filled the space behind the footlights. Beneath a beautiful shield, encolled in gay flags, was suspended an ingenious scroll of white buds, with the words, "Law Department" traced in blushing pinks. Encircling the outlines of the stage ou all sides there was a plentiful distribution of green palmetto bushes and existic plants.

exotic plants. To add to the scene a distinguished per-sonnel adorned the stage, including President Arthur, ex-Justice Strong. Associate Justice Arthur, ex-Justice Strong, Associate Justice Stanley Matthews, Commissioner Eaton, Judge Hagner, Comptroller Knox, of the treasury: Dr. Gill, of the Smithsonian institution; District Attorney Corkhill, Mr. Loring, commissioner of agriculture; Dr. Gregory and Dorman B. Eaton, of the civil service cammission, and many others. Besides these were the faculty, the trustees, and the gradu-

After an overture by the marine band, an I an invocation by Rev. Dr. Hay, of Massachusetts, Hon. Jefferson Chandler delivered the annual address. The address was the feature of the evening, the effort of the gentleman betraying deep thought and captivating eloquence. After reviewing the state of law in modern civilized nations, and dwelling upon the history, the beauty, and perfection of American jurisprudence, the speaker concluded as follows:

of American jurisprudence, the speaker concluded as follows:

Young gentlemen, you begin your career in the profession of law on the summit of other mens attainments. You see spread out before you the gathered wisdom of the world. Ten years hence, when your mental sinews become knotted and toughened by the rugged conflicts through which you will have passed, you will experience an enduring reverence for the conservatism of the law, which always will represent the bealthy growth of practical wisdom. You will turn away with athorence from freedom's most subtile and dangerous enemy—arbitrary power. You will lave no patience with those thoughtless and imbeelle persons who, being in office, pass beyond the limits of their just legal authority at the invitation of others whose minds are the abode of fanaticism but are strangers to reason.

It is unnecessary for me to speak concerning your conduct in the profession. Three endowments are indispensible to great success in practice. They are intelligence, application, and honor. From this triple alliance professional success will come as naturally as the flower from the seed. Do not yield your own opinion to readily to the first decision squints your position. Persistency and courage are the great executive faculties of the human mind, and they as often turn tide of fortune in legal as in military conflicts."

James C. Welling, L.L. D., President of the law faculty, then called the graduates for-ward, in squads of eight, and the degrees were conferred. The following is a list of the

WASHINGTON HIGH SCHOOL.

Yesterday morning a goodly audience gathered in the assembly ball of the Washington High School to witness the commencement exercises. The arrangements were in all respects tasteful, elegant, and unique. The among them Gen. West, Gen. Eaton, Supt. Wilson, Mr. Warner, Gen. Curtis, Gen. Birney, and Gen. Ayres. It was the first commence-ment of the new school, and so without pre-cedents the authorities of the school had full sway in the plan and arrangement of their attractive programme.

At 10 o'clock precisely the graduates marched into the hall, the rest of the school having assembled with the audience. The girls were dressed for the most part in white, with enough of variety to relieve the eyes pleasantly here and there with a dash of color. A marked feature of the dress was its simplicity. For the most part it seemed as i, the high school boys and girls had met in pretty, simple, every day dress and blue tractive programme. in pretty, simple, every day dress and blue uniforms and brass buttons to give a pleasant entertainment. First of the honors of the occasion was the salutatory in Latin by Miss Phoebe Holmes. From Miss Holmes's graceful and expressive delivery the audience, though not all familiar with the language, gathered the greeting exwith the language, gathered the greeting ex-tended to them. A noticeable feature of the salutatorian was her accurate pronunciation and appreciation of the classical speech, which gave another proof of the careful training and enthusiastic teaching under Miss Dame, the vice principal, whose scholarship and success have made the Latin department popular. Miss Holmes has gained high honors in her course at the high school, and leaves it to enter in September next up in a wider range of study at the college of liberal arts Boston university.

arts Boston university.

The subject of Mr. Steck's oration was "Technical Education." It was an earnest plea for the maintenance of technical courses in our public schools, and a showing of the necessity of America's preparing her own sons and daughters by a thorough course of instruction in the mechanical arts, and her failure to compete with European nations when most of the wealth of this country becomes most of the wealth of this country becomes such mainly through the development of the natural resources of the land.

Miss Sipe's essay upon the "Omnipresent Sparrow" was brilliant and witty. The audience fully agreed with her that the English sparrow must go and eat the carefully sowed grass seeds of other countries; that it is a base usurper with Olver Twist propensities; that it has superseded the songstors; that before them delighted us and must share the fate of the celestials that not long ago received an invitation to depart.

Miss Perry's essay, entitled "Back Door Glimpses," was full of sharp witty sarcasm, showing that one more person in this world is aware of social shams, and is willing to pleasantly expose and ridicule them.

The oration of Mr. Harry English on "Egypt, a Land of Contrast," was a commendable production. Mr. English will soon and wider amplication and enjargement of an invitation to depart.

of the daries of the city, and applied chemical and physical tests of the purity of the

The "Class History" by Miss McKinney was humorous, original, and characteristic.
From it was learned that "it is cosmopolitan in tastes and residence; twenty-two hail from the capital, five from 'Maryland, my Maryland,' two bring with them the hardy spirit of Maine, two come from the Green Mountain state, and two from New York. Tennessee. state, and two from New York. ages count up six centuries."

The essay of Miss Alice Hutchinson on "Rumor" was scholarly and interesting. It fairly represented the good work of culture done as a student by Miss Hutchinson, the daughter of the president of the Unity club of this city.

One of the noticeable parts of the programme was the valedictory by Mr. Clement gramme was the valedictory by Mr. Clement L. M. Sites. The subject was a popular one, "The Americans a Home-loving People."

Appropriate enough was this essay just after the Payne memorial, and it was clearly shown that the home-loving spirit was the stable thing, the binding thing in American life. There were opportunities for flashes of wit, and these were not lost by the valedictorian. Mr. Sites has occived the Boston university scholarship, which this year was open to the boys of the school.

The military drill added much to the pleasure of the occasion. Gen. West has brought

The first was a showing of the growth structure and development of the tulip tree, and this was conducted by Miss J. Adele Hammett. The second was the Marsh test of arsenic, by Miss Sarah E. Simmons. The third was a clear and interesting demonstration of the effect on falling bodies of the removal of atfect on failing bodies of the removal or at-mospheric pressure and too a demonstration of the properties of liqu ds. This was con-ducted by Georgo H. Ayres. The fourth was an illustration and explana-tion by Appleton P. Clark, of the methods and instrument used in surveying. These were an interesting part of the pro-gramme and were used to show that it is the principle of the school to bring the pupils as much as possible te a practical working of the abstract principles of mathematics and the

The music was finely rendered. Miss Roberts led the school choruses. Mr. Doyle was pianist, and the musical part of the programme showed excellence in selection and gramme showed excellence in selection and rendering. Especially fine were the chorus, "Come Where the Lilies Bloom," and the quartette, "Swiss People's Song." Miss Rath-bone and Miss Pumphrey were noticeable for their sweet singing.

After the commencement exercises were over the audience passed into the various rooms where the members of the school held pleasant informal receptions of their friends. From the large exhibition hall, in the center of the third floor, the audience passed into the laboratories and drawing room. The main drawing room is large, airy, and supplied with an abundance of soft light. The walls of cream and crimson are adorned with busts of Minerva, Juno, and others, while casts of leaves and flowers are hung here and there, These serve as models for the pupils, and all respects tasteful, elegant, and unique. The floral decorations were chaste and rich, wild flowers mingling with the prouder blooms of the garden, and the tall plants of the tropics. There were many prominent citizens present, among them Gen. West, Gen. Eaton, Supt. how a course of drawing thus conducted is far superior to usual flat drawing, both of purely inechanical designs and the meaning-less copying of landscapes, for every design has a history of its own, and while the eye is taught and the right hand loses none of its cunning the mind is impressed with the cul-ture and historical glory of antiquity. Among others of especial merit were a Saracenic capi-tal, Antifex to the Parthenon, Romanesque capital, Byzantine ornament and capital, Roman Acanthus, and Moorish form. These were all specimens of work done in the regular classes.

Passing into a smaller room there was seen the work of the special classes. These are three in number, and the course includes practice in industrial drawing, models, and flowers, flat copies—geometrical drawing (outline)—designs. The second year's work is a continuation of this, with the addition of shading and mechanical, perspective, and applied designs for practical purposes. The third is devotedlargely to mechanical, perspective, and topographical drawing.

The pretty special drawing room has its walls decorated with the work of the classes gathering there. Among others were seen lar classes.

gathering there. Among others were seen sketches of some of the public buildings of the city. All the work attested the industry and skill of the pupils and the careful and excellent training and management of Mrs, Fuller and Miss Wilson, who are in charge of this department.

On the second floor are recitation rooms, study hall, office, and drill hall. Here in the racks were the dumb bells, wands, and rings of the athletic and gymnastic clubs.

Passing to the first floor you enter the recitation rooms with their boards covered with follows:

With the adequate equipments that will surely be offered it by public or private generosity, and with the efficient corps of instructors now in charge of it, and with the high standard to which the principal, E.
